Agio Technology Shaping Up to Become Healthiest Workplace in Oklahoma

Norman, OK – June 27, 2011– Agio Technology, a provider of managed IT services for the nation’s premier hedge funds, today announced the launching of its company-wide initiative to become one of the healthiest workplaces in the state of Oklahoma. Recently, USA Today published a list of the healthiest cities in the nation. For Bart McDonough, CEO of Norman, Oklahoma based Agio Technology, Oklahoma City’s slot in last place is no joke.

Mirroring his personal commitment to health and wellness, McDonough is creating a wellness program for the firm’s 75-plus employees focusing on education with the goal of helping Agio employees lead a healthier lifestyle.

“Health and productivity go hand in hand,” says McDonough, who shed 20 pounds himself since January 2011 by following the Paleo diet. “I see it in myself how my energy has quadrupled and my sense of overall well-being has gone up. As a company built on providing excellent customer service in the dynamic and fast-paced environment of the hedge fund industry and supporting their mission-critical technologies, we need to be on our A-game at all times. That’s difficult to do if you eat fast food, use coffee and colas as energy-boosters, and avoid regular exercise.”

Inspired to make Agio a destination employer, McDonough has already implemented a few changes throughout the company. Looking to promote a healthier work environment, the company recently approved a healthy snack fund for its operational headquarters in Norman and is developing an enhanced benefits package that will incorporate elements that encourage health and wellness. The company also plans to implement other activities and events that are designed to encourage a fit-for-life mentality among its employees.
